PLAYBILL

BC PLAYHOUSE

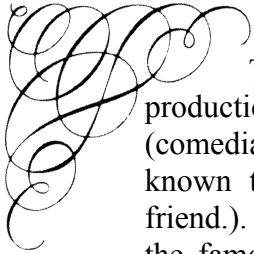

SCAPIN

By Molière

Adapted by Bill Irwin and Mark O'Donnell

Presented By The BC Players
November 18 ~ 21, 2009

Notes from the Director . . .

The 17th century meets the 20th century in our production of Scapin, in a new translation by Bill Irwin (comedian, clown, serious actor, writer, director and well-known to Sesame Street fans as Mr. Noodle, Elmo's friend.). Penned by Jean-Baptiste Poquelin, aka Molière, the famous French playwright popular since the 1600s,

Les Fourberies de Scapin gets a modern makeover as commedia dell'arte meets disco tonight, reluctantly.

Our goal is to provide you enjoyment, serving up truth in a light-hearted, nay, wacky setting. We recommend you suspend your serious sensibilities and yield to playful incongruities, over-the-top deliveries, "Deweys-ex-machinay," (deus ex machina as mispronounced by Scapin) and in-your-face stock characters. We also sincerely apologize for dishing out generous helpings of disco music (a guilty pleasure.)

So, suspend academic logic and sequential thinking (the kind that says "but that doesn't make sense" and "why did the boy get on the boat?") and yield to our buffoonery to best feel the therapeutic benefits of laughter deep in your soul.

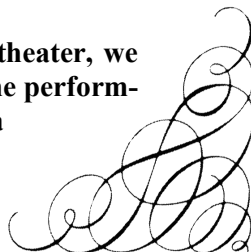

À votre santé!
Mme. Estelle Griffine

Note to theater buffs: Scapin, is a zany character who is a zanni (the stereotypical servant in commedia who is always running away from one trouble to another, hence the pun on the word escaping.)

Note to etymology fans: the origin of our word "zany" comes from commedia dell'arte from the name of the servant Zanni, a derivation of the Italian name Giovanni.

* Note to students: Gotcha! This will not be on your test, but don't you feel smarter?

To ensure an enjoyable experience for all in the theater, we request that all cell phones be turned off during the performance. We would also like to remind everyone that a whisper heard by your neighbor can also be heard by all those around you.

If you would like to contribute your skills to the production of plays at Brethren Christian — construction of sets, locating props, design of or fabrication of costumes, makeup design or application, or providing food for the cast and crew during rehearsals — please contact the drama department director, Mrs. Griffin.

Brethren Christian High School Welcomes
The Cappies of Orange County
The Cappies is a program through which high school theater and journalism students are trained as critics, attend shows at other schools, write reviews and publish those reviews in local newspapers.
 BCHS welcomes the Cappies student critics to our Saturday night performance of Scapin.
